SURFACE MANUGING, -It was not known until discovered by Way, and confirmed by Liebig and others, that a few inches in depth of surface soil has the power to fix or retain all, or nearly all, the food of plants which our manure contains, such as potash, phosphato of lime and ammonia, thus preventing its passage into the poor sutsoil, and it is not even yet known that nearly all the feeding roots of plants are within a few inches of the surface where these nutritious elements are. We now and then find roots many feet below the surface, and because they are so found people have theorized that manure should be planted deep, and that there was a nutritious principle deep down in subsoil culture. Deep soil holds moisture, and so far deep soil is of value. A few roots have to do duty as drawers of water for the community; but such roots are few, and these are the roots the deep explorer finds. But where one little root can be found running down like this, hundreds will be spreading away beneath the surface, and these are the ones that are collecting the solid food. For these reasons, manure should never be buried deep, but be always kept as near the surface DIS HORNED CAPTLE, - Mr. Mechi writes as follows on an Irish practice which will probably be new to most of our renders :

t purchased two such lots, supposing them to be heme-bred polled cattle; and every farmer who saw them concluded they were so; but one day an Aberdeen farmer of 800 acres, who fattens 260 cat-tle annually, said that they were frish, and their horns had been removed, and that it was a common Itish practice to remove the horns from their well-bred extle intended for the English markets. He also said that as an extensive buyer of Irish cattle, if they came to him horned, he removed the horns, finding it advantageous to do so; and I quite agree with him, for, unlike the Irish cattle generally, I find them quiet, goodt-inpered, and good deers. I see that a dealer was heavily fined for cruelty in removing the horns, but would not this apply to the castration and cropping of ruls from sheep? The matter requires ventilation. The absence of horns is certainly a considerable advantage to

The Om tha Herald gives seven reas ins why farmers are happier and healthier than men of the professions: 1. They work more, and develop al! the leading muscles of the body.

2. They take their exercise in the air, and breathe a greater amount of oxy-3. Their tood and drinks are common, less adulterated, and far more 4. They do not overwork their brain as much as industrious professional or business men do.

5. They take their sleep commonly during the hours of darkness, and do not try to turn night into day. 6. They are not so ambitions, und do not wear themselves out so rapidly in the fierce contest of rivalry. 7. Their pleasures are simple and less
